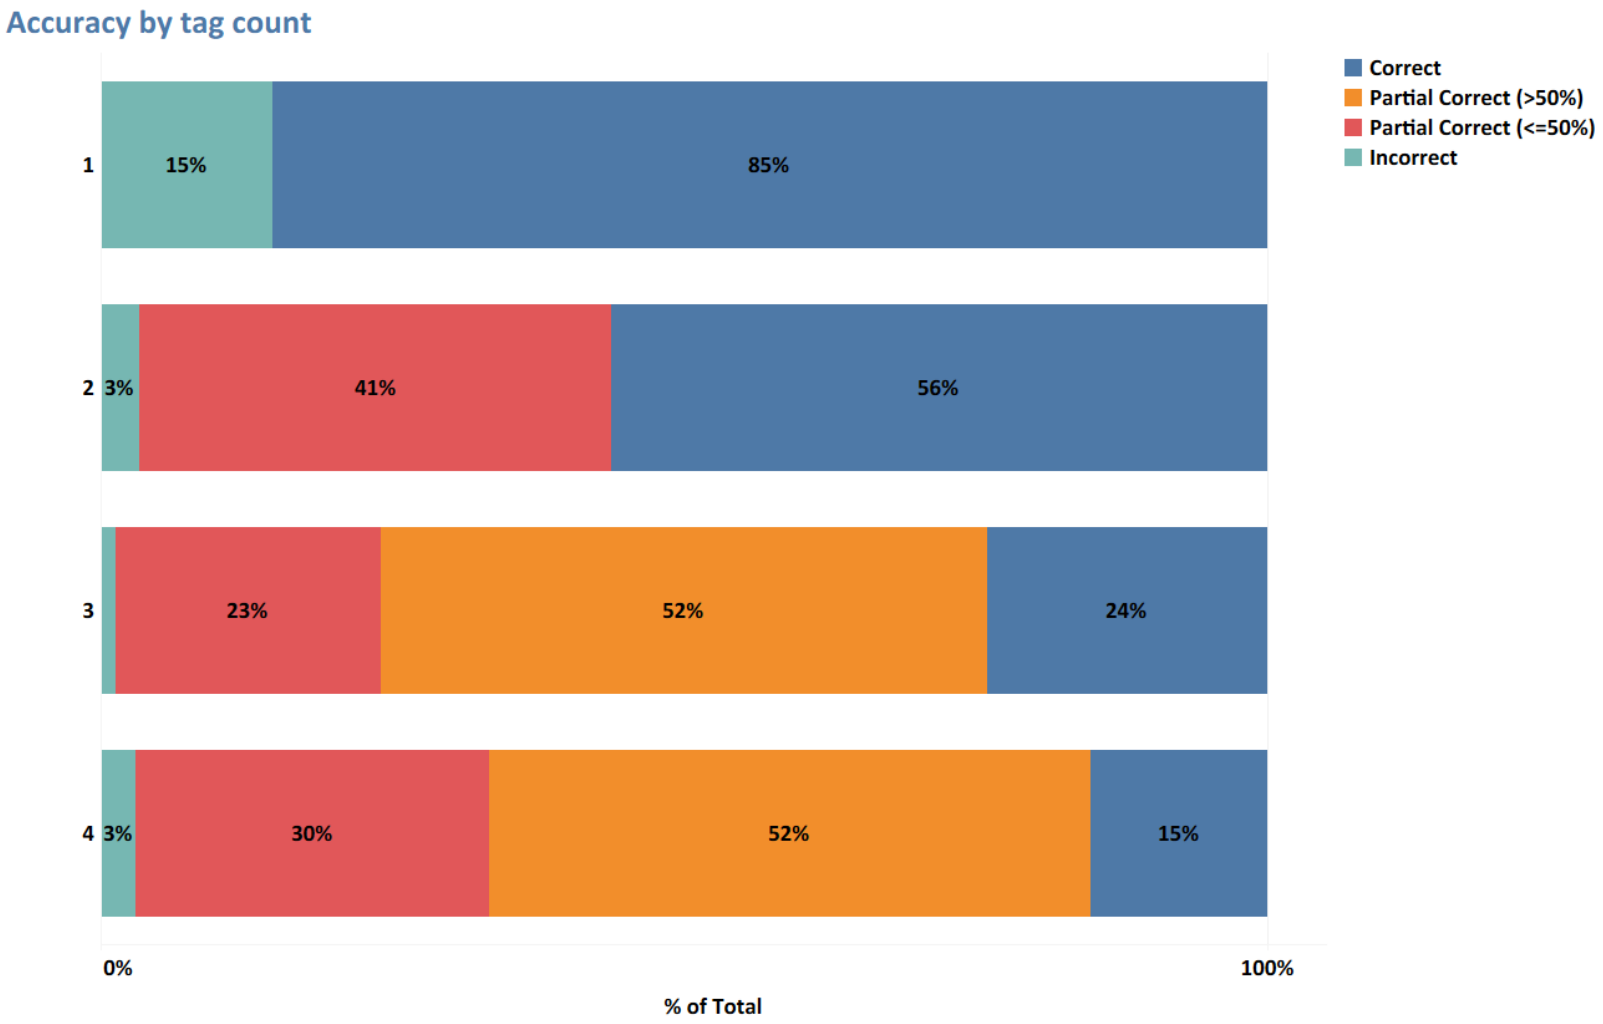
Accuracy declines as complexity increases



- As complexity grows, correctness declines, yet partial complete accuracy tends to remain the same.
- The one issue with non-complex complaints is that it is all or nothing, either it is correct or incorrect making their importance outsized.
  - 65% of incorrect responses came from non-complex, single-issue complaints making them an important group on which to focus.

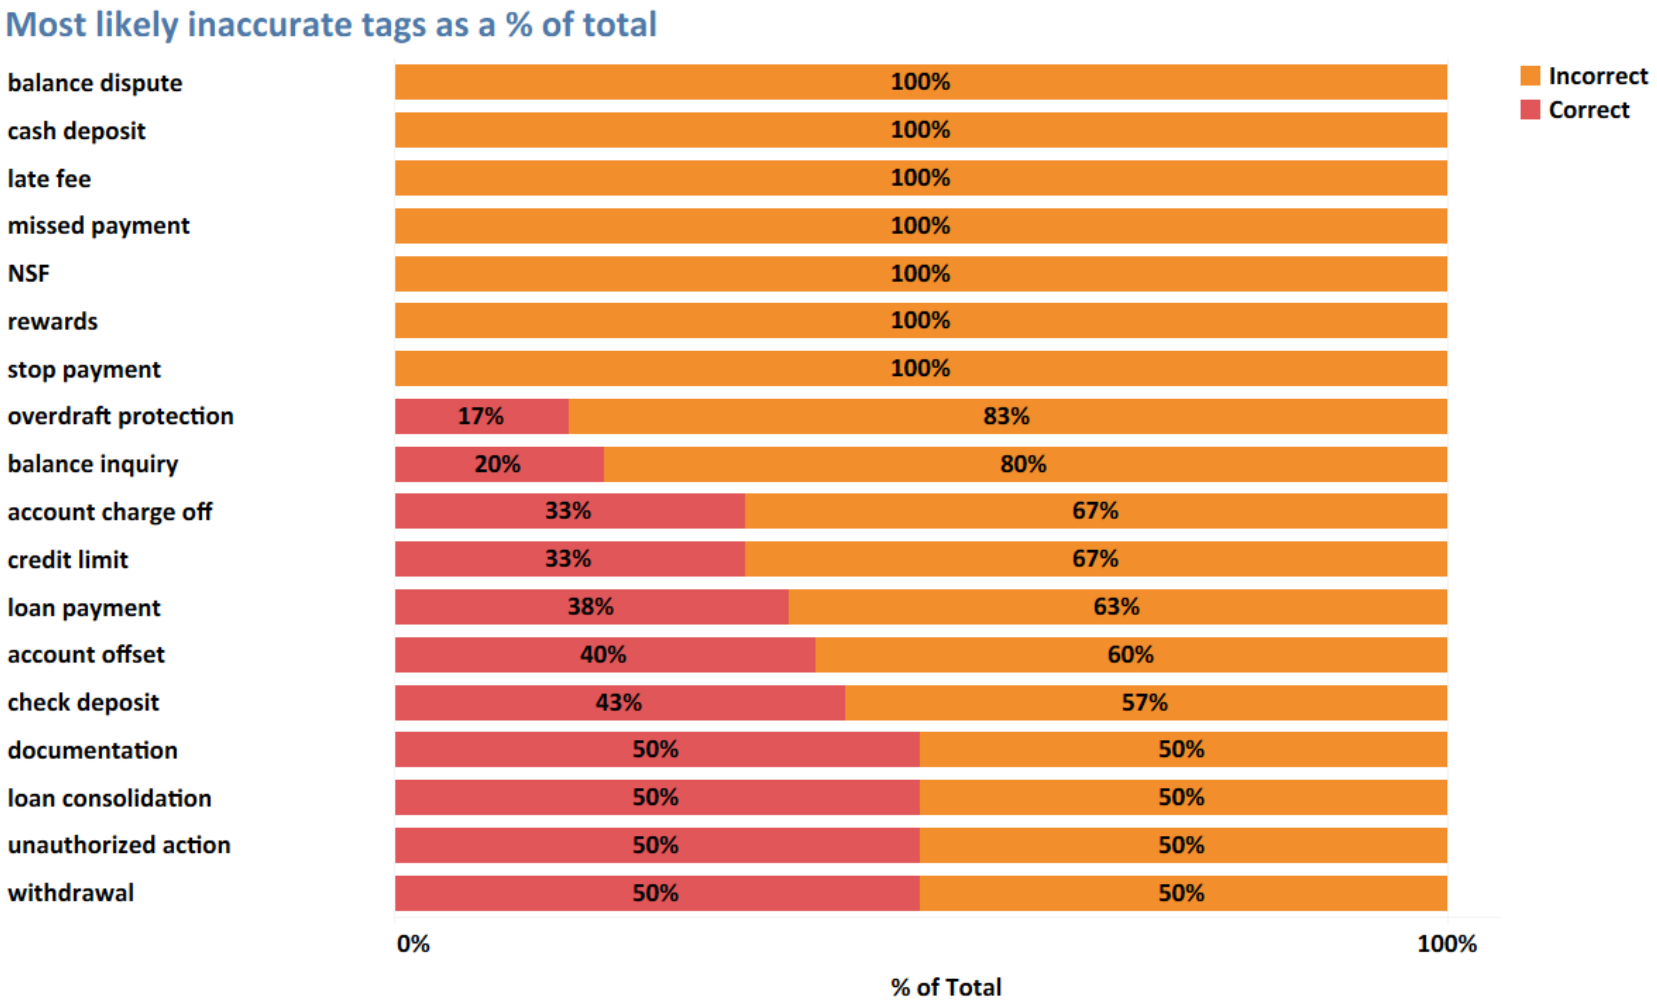
Accuracy by tag: count or percent



There are two ways to validate accuracy by tag:

1. Validate accuracy by percent right/wrong when using a certain tag.
2. Validate accuracy by counting the tag with the highest number of error rates

Depending on the validation method used, the results differ

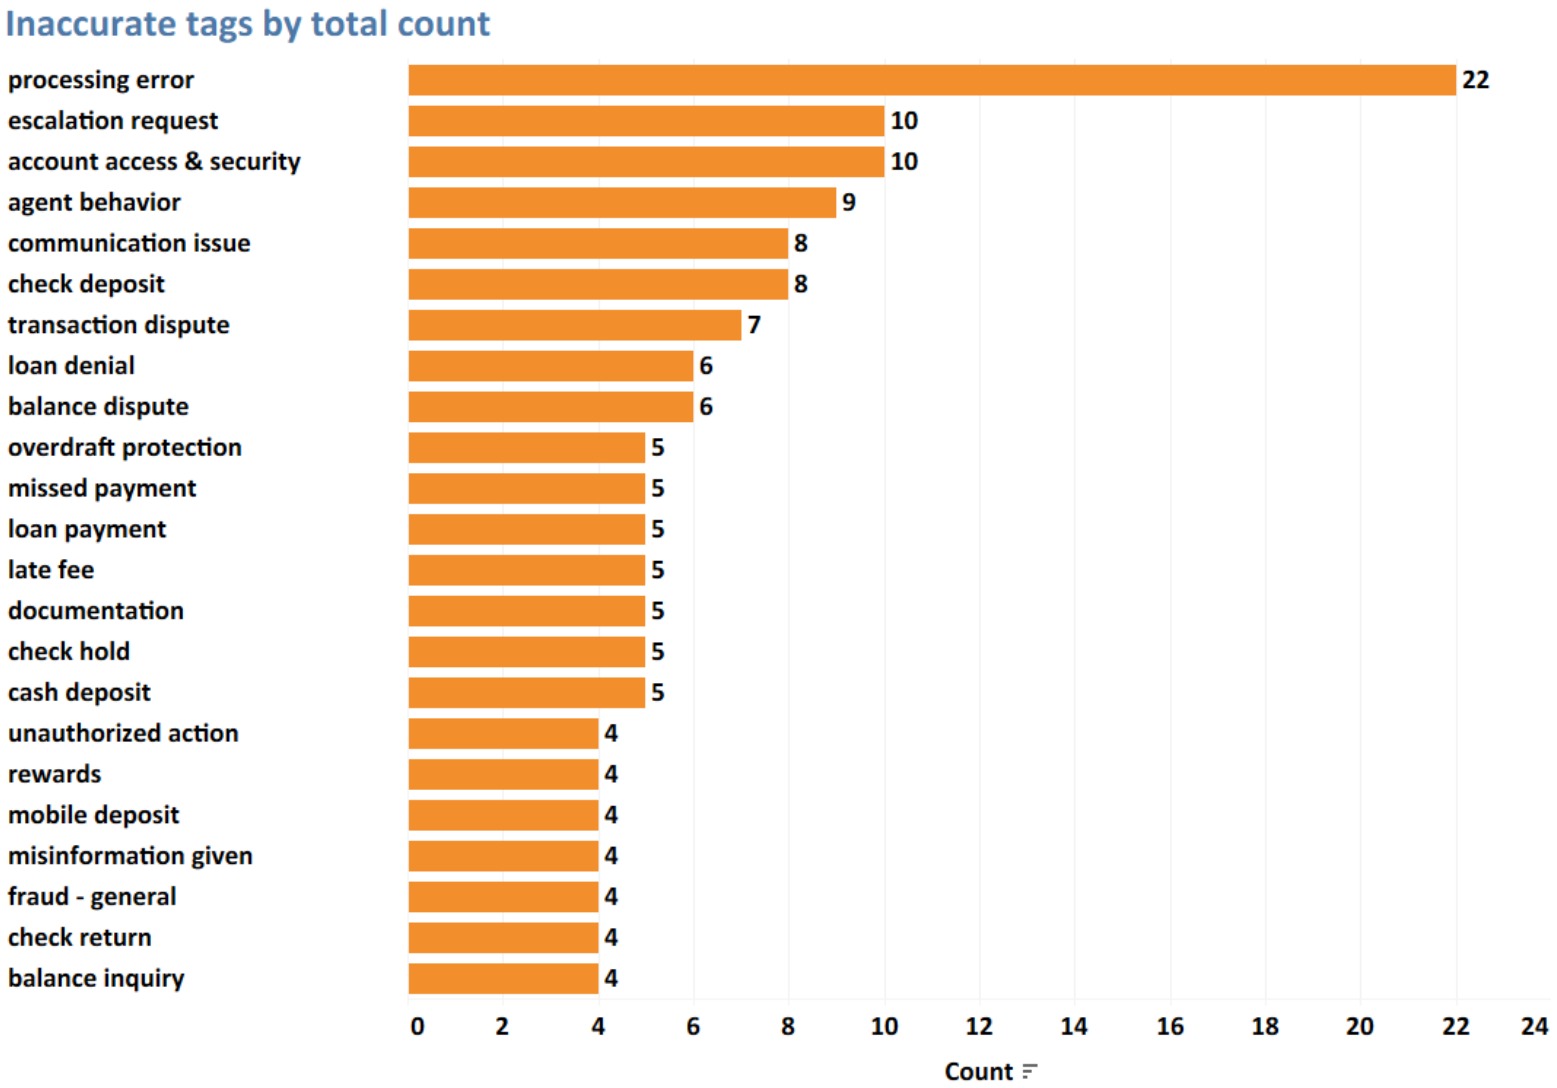
Accuracy by tag: count or percent



1. By Percent: these are tags that are not used as often. Because of the lack of broad usage, the model typically misses the tag altogether with the fix being to ensure the model reads the tag corectly

2. By Count: popular tags that are widely used, yet are used incorrectly or missed as a relevant tag during the process

<NULL>

By a significant margin, the most important issue that arises where tags are incorrect is that the model is missing a relevant tag completely or returning a <NULL> value. 62% of all incorrect tags are due to a tag being missed, not to the tag being wrong, making it the most important issue to solve in the model.

While there are instances where a tag is misapplied (see payment misapplied as a tag), the model's biggest weakness at this point is that it is failing to read the entire complaint accurately and is not applying all relevant tags.

This is the reason why accuracy declines significantly as complexity of complaints increases, is that the model is not yet reading the entire complaint correctly. Hence, we have a large number of partial corrects to varying degrees.

Missed Tags: Comprehensive Overview

Correct Tag	Predicted Tag	Explanation
balance dispute	<NULL>	1. This was most likely to be missed as a relevant tag to the complaint. 2. A balance dispute is where a member disagrees with a stated balance. Could be checking, savings, money market, loan, etc. A member will believe the balance should be something different then that which they are being told.
Cash deposit	Payment misapplied	1. Cash deposits were likely to be tagged as a payment, especially when that deposit also included a processing error, which is the cash being deposited into the wrong account. 2. A cash deposit is any instance where a member is depositing cash into a personal or business account, a checking/savings/CD account, etc. A payment misapplied would be where they are paying off a credit card or loan and that payment is applied towards the wrong financial instrument, either loan or card balance.

Correct Tag	Predicted Tag	Explanation
Processing error	<NULL> Payment misapplied	1. This was most likely to be missed as a relevant tag to the complaint. 2. Processing errors were often tagged as misapplied payments. 3. Often, the model will incorrectly tag a processing error as a payment misapplied in conjunction with a deposit: mobile, check, or cash.
Escalation request	<NULL>	1. This was most likely to be missed as a relevant tag to the complaint. 2. There are two issues to be aware of: 1) the member asks for an escalation and the model misses the request, or 2) the MACU employee escalates a call to assist, but there was no escalation requested. Both of these are issues that are seen.
